FREE CHECKLIST FOR ESTATE AGENTS

5 ways estate agents stop losing buyer calls

Every unanswered call can be a buyer who rings the next agent instead. Use this one-page checklist to close the gaps in how your office handles enquiries.

1 Know when calls are being missed

Check your phone system's call log weekly. Look for patterns: lunchtime, viewings, Saturdays, evenings, right after a new listing goes live.

✓ Action: list your three busiest "nobody can pick up" time slots.

2 Never let a call end in silence

Replace a generic voicemail with a short, friendly message that says when you'll call back, and offer another way to reach you (text or email).

✓ Action: re-record your voicemail and out-of-hours greeting today.

3 Call back fast, with a clear owner

Agree who returns missed calls and how quickly. A named person and a simple rule ("same morning / same afternoon") stops enquiries falling between desks.

✓ Action: set a team callback rule and put it in writing.

4 Capture the same details every time

Use a short script for every enquiry: name, number, property of interest, budget, mortgage/position, preferred viewing times. Log it in your CRM straight away.

✓ Action: print a 6-question enquiry card for every desk.

5 Cover evenings, weekends and busy days

Buyers often ring after work or at weekends. Decide how those calls are covered: a rota, call forwarding, an answering service, or an AI receptionist.

✓ Action: make sure every hour your listings are live, someone (or something) answers.

Want point 5 handled for you?

Niamh is an AI receptionist built for estate agents. She answers buyer calls, takes the details and passes them to your team, day or night.

See how it works: maximus150118.github.io/niamh-ai-receptionist